A HUGE MAJORITY

GAINED STATE BY 60,000

Unprecedented Victory Achieved Without a Drop of Blood Shed—Republicans, Populists, and a Few Negroes Voted for the Amendment.—Only a Few Counties Went Republican and All by Reduced Majorities.—Official Count Necessary in Only a Few Instances—Both Houses of the Legislature Democratic by Four-Fifths—Chairman Simmons Pithily Tells the Story to Gov.-Elect Aycock.

Special Dispatch to The Telegram.

Raleigh, August 2.—The bottom has literally fallen out of the fusion campaign. The Democratic majority is even vaster than expected. At midnight it seems safe to say that the franchise amendment is ratified by at least sixty thousand majority. It appears that the Democratic State ticket will run a little ahead of the amendment. In this county there were one hundred negroes who voted for the amendment and in nearly all counties some negroes voted for it.

National Democratic Committeeman Josephus Daniels confirming this statement says that eight-tenths of the Populists voted for the amendment, as did a large number of white Republicans, particularly in the center and east. The claim made by the Republican and Populist managers of intimidation and fraud is utterly disproved by the overwhelming majority received for the amendment. Committeeman Daniels says the vote of the Populists for the amendment proves conclusively that Senator Butler is no longer a power in North Carolina but is a man without a party.

THE STORY TERSELY TOLD.

Special Dispatch to The Telegram.

Raleigh, August 3.—At one o'clock this morning Democratic State Chairman Simmons tersely told the story of the greatest political victory ever won in North Carolina in the following telegram to Governor-elect Aycock: "Hearty congratulations upon your election by over fifty thousand majority. The Legislature is four-fifths Democratic in each branch."

Johnson county claims 2,000 to 2,500 for the whole Democratic ticket and the amendment.

Catawba claims 300 majority for the Democratic party.

In Davidson the amendment will run a little behind the State ticket. Both sides claim the county. It is pretty certain that there is a Democratic majority of about 100.

Northampton reports the success of the full Democratic ticket by 1500.

Rowan reports the probable result as 1600 majority for the State ticket and 1300 for the amendment.

Pitt county claims a large majority for the whole Democratic ticket—1200.

Person county estimates a majority of 100 to 200.

Granville county is Democratic on the legislative and county tickets, and the amendment, by 400.

Brunswick, in which there were three tickets gives 500 majority for Democrats and amendment.

Complete returns from New Hanover give Aycock 2969 majority. Before the revolution of 1898 there were 3000 negro voters in the city of Wilmington. Today there were only two negro votes cast. Not more than twenty anti-amendment votes were cast in the county.

Richmond has a Democratic majority of 1500 for the amendment and the entire ticket.

Wilkes county will elect Greene, Democrat to the legislature, balance of the ticket Republican, by a decreased majority.

Wayne goes Democratic by 2300.

Edgecombe's majority is estimated at over 3200.

Chowan reports entire Democratic ticket elected.

Vance gives a Democratic majority of 400 or 500.

Martin gives 1083 Democratic majority.

Lenoir claims a majority of 900 for State ticket and the amendment.

Orange reports 250 Democratic majority.

Anson is safe by 1200 or 1500 which is a gain of 700 votes over that of 1898.

Pasquotank claims to have gone Democratic by 500.

Republicans concede Bertie to the Democrats by 500.

Perquimans reports safe for the amendment, by 250.

Franklin goes Democratic by 700 to to 1000.

Wake's Democratic majority will be least 1500. About fifteen negroes voted for the Amendment.

Green gives 500 Democratic and amendment majority.

Reports from Wilson county point to a majority of 1200 or 1500, and a gain of 1000 over last election.

Albemarle estimate Democratic majority at 800 to 1000.

Forsyth gives Democratic majority of 500.

McDowell reports 250 to 300 Democratic.

Cumberland county goes 1000 to 1200 Democratic.

Harnett gives 400 Democrat majority.

Washington county gives a majority of 400 to 500 for amendment and ticket.

Halifax gives the amendment 368 majority, and elects everything on the ticket.

Beaufort gives an estimated majority of 1000 for the ticket and amendment.

Tyrell gives 100 majority.

Iredell sends in 600 for the amendment, and 800 for the State ticket.

Burke goes Democratic 500.

Carteret goes 250.

THE DISPENSARY MUST GO.

SO SAID THE VOTERS YESTERDAY.

The "Antis" Carried the County With a Whoop---The Majority Large Enough for All Practical Purposes---The Result Caused Elation Among the Opponents of the Institution and a Celebration Was in Order.

Complete returns from the white primary on the dispensary were not received from all the precincts last night, thought it was apparent early in the evening that the dispensary had been overwhelmingly defeated. The majority is not known, but suffice it to say that it is sufficient to satisfy the most extreme opponent of the institution. It is probably 1,000 or 1,200, perhaps more.

As stated in yesterday's Telegram, a light vote was polled in the primary, even here in Greensboro, where interest in the subject has been greatest. People who had been very pronounced in their views failed to vote on either side of the question, while some who had declared themselves as favoring one side voted for the other.

In Greensboro the majority against the dispensary is 71; in High Point 364; North Gilmer township, outside, 156; North Rock Creek, 31; Oak Ridge, 50; South Jefferson, 30. This makes a majority of 702 and will give a fair idea of how the county has gone.

Those who oppose the measure in Greensboro were, of course, highly elated over their victory. They gave vent to their joy and celebrated hilariously. The Gate City Band was employed to furnish music, while the small boys, and some large ones, made the streets resound with the din of tin horns. A large crowd of men and boys followed a number of banners and red lights and strained their vocal organs in loud and continuous cheering.

No one took the trouble to attempt to find out just the number of ballots that sealed the fate of the dipensay. Everyone knew that it was sufficient and was satisfied.

At a late, or rather early, hour the boisterous "antis" dispersed, some of them perhaps to dream of cooling mint juleps and rejuvenating absinthe frappes to be served across bars when the "old days" shall have returned.

In commenting on the complaint from Paris that there has been a slim attendance on the exposition in that city, the Nashville American says that the people of the United States have become so accustomed to first-class expositions that they are not so prone to be drawn across the ocean to see such shows. There is an intimation in our contemporary's remarks that those who saw the exposition at Nashville have no need to go to Paris.

BURIED MILLIONS.

Our Cemeteries Would Make Rich Mines, Says an Undertaker.

"From my own observations I estimate that there must be property to the value of several millions of dollars buried in our cemeteries," said an undertaker recently to the writer. "Scarcely a funeral takes place, especially among well-to-do people, without some article of pecuniary worth being consigned to the earth, either on the body or in the coffin with it.

"Wedding rings are generally allowed to remain, and quite frequently jewelry of a far more valuable nature. I remember one case where the deceased—a young girl—was decked with about $1,500 worth of jewelry and trinkets. She had been married only a few weeks before her death, and they were the presents she had received during the days of her courtship. Her husband insisted on their being buried with her.

"In another instance a very wealthy man, who had been in his time a famous all-round athlete, made it one of the condition of his will that all his prizes and trophies—consisting for the most part of gold and silverware—should be placed in the grave with his body, inclosed in a separate receptacle."—Cin. Enquirer.

GUILFORD SAFE

DEMOCRACY TRIUMPHS

The Returns Indicate that the Democrats Did Themselves Proud at the Polls Yesterday---But Little Difference in the Vote on the Amendment and the State and County Tickets---The Majority Greater than Had been Anticipated---It is Not Less than 700, and Probably More.

Once again has the Democracy of old Gnilford gone out to do battle with the enemy and returned with the crown of victory and to the applause of the people. In the past notable contests have been waged and brilliant victories achieved, but none which brought more exultation than the triumph of yesterday. The Democracy of Guilford county stood girded to the loins and ready for the fray when the polls opened yesterday morning, and when the last ballot—emblem of the soverign power of an American freeman—had been deposited it was recorded that the descendants of the men who had fought British tyranny at Guilford Court House had acted well their part in helping to throw off from the necks of Anglo-Saxons in North Carolina a yoke that is more galling than oppression by a civilized foreign foe.

The returns so far received indicate that the result as forecasted was a conservative estimate of the victory that awaited the Democrats of this county in their efforts to assist in perpetuating white supremacy in North Carolina. When the registration books were closed twelve days ago it was known that success awaited the amendment and the Democratic ticket in this county, if the efforts then being made were continued and a full vote polled. This has been done, and the victory is ours—by a large majority.

Very few of the townships made official returns last night and it is impossible to give the exact result this morning. It may be stated as a fact that the average majority of the ticket is not less than 700, the estimate published in the Telegram a few days ago. The official returns may show it be more. It will be observed that there is but little difference between the amendment and the State and county tickets.

The official count may cause a few changes in the following figures, though not enough to effect the result. From only a few of the precincts were the returns on the full ticket reported last night, though a fairly correct estimate may be formed from the following:

The Vote in Greensboro.

The vote in Greensboro was the heaviest ever polled and the Democratic majority the greatest ever gained. In 1898 the majority was 332; yesterday it was 511, an increase of 179. The vote in the four precincts was as follows:

PIVOTAL STATES THIS YEAR.

Enormous German Vote Which is Able to Swing Them.

New York Special to Baltimore Sun.

By common consent the result of the presidential election this year hangs upon the States of the Middle West, several of the sparsely settled trans-Missi-sipgi Commonwealths, and Maryland, Deleware, West Virginia and Kentucky.

In 1896 McKinley carried all the States in question which lie this side of the Mississippi river. Of the trans-Missippi States which are to figure promiently in 1900, Bryan carried four years ago South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Nebraska and Kansas with a total of 31 electoral votes short of the number necessary to elect. It is contended by Democratic managers that the trans-Mississippi States carried by Bryan four years ago, with the single exception of Washington, are safe for him this year, a claim which the Republicans are by no means ready to concede.

At any rate, it is certain that Democratic success cannot be achieved without important gains east of the Mississippi river. This fact, as well as the new issues which have come to the front since the last election, make the Middle West and one or two of the Eastern States the battleground of the campaign. Since the former Democartic States of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut are conceded to the Republicans by some of the Democratic leaders, the parties are to line up for the decisive struggle in Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky, Maryland and Delaware. The first five of these States contain a large German-American population, and it is this fact which leads Democrats to hope, through the issue of imperialism, to reverse the decisive Republican majorities which they gave in 1896.

It is the confident claim of the Democracy that the German-Americans who were so unanimous for McKinley four years ago are lining up by the thousands for Bryan because they object to the imperialistic tendencies of the present administration. Understanding free silver to be at least asleep for a long time, many Germans have no fear of the existing gold standard, and are ready to record their opposition to imperialism and militarism.

The twelfth census will not be completed in time to give exact figures with regard to the distribution of the German-American population. The figures of the eleventh census give some basis for estimates. By estimating the increase of the German-born population and those of German-born parentage at 20 per cent. when it is believed to be conservative, and estimating one voter for every five persons, the German-American population in the battle-ground States in which this vote is important would be about as shown in this table:

	German Population	Vote
Ohio	807,000	161,000
Indiana	321,000	64,300
Illinois	962,000	192,400
Michigan	380,000	76,000
Wisconsin	751,000	150,200
Minnesota	334,000	66,800
Nebraska	196,000	39,000
Kansas	150,000	30,000
Kentucky	124,000	24,000

There is no way to tell just what proportion of the German-American vote McKinley got in 1896, but it is estimated that he received from 80 to 60 per cent. of it. The extent of the probable chaoge this year is therefore apparent.

"Where?" eagerly asked the boarder with the green stripped shirt, speaking for his fellow-sufferers.

"At a lumber yard," cruelly replied the heartless wretch.

41 Ships Chartered to Carry Bananas.

Philadelphia Times.

Shipping circles were startled on Saturday by the fact that 41 steamers were chartered for the West Indies fruit trade between this city and West Indian and South American ports. Thirty-four of these charters were renewal of previously existing contracts, but the remainder were charters o' bulky vessels, which were required to meet the exigencies of the local market.

These vessels have been chartered almost entirely for the banana trade, but not all of them will come to this port. The other destinations assigned to them are New York, Baltimore and Boston, but 75 per cent. of the trade comes to this city.

The explanation of the extraordinary number of charters is the need of transportation of an unusually large crop of bananas, which seems to have been anticipated by an unprecented demand in the local markets. The import of the fruit from Cuba, Honduras, Costa Rica, San Domingo and other Southern regions this year has been far above the average, and the demands of the trade here have impelled the importers to engage the service of extra steamers.

The Mars Hill Conference.

Correspondence of the Telegram.

Mars Hill, August 2.—The Mars Hill Conference for Christian Workers, met at ten o'clock Tuesday a. m. After devotional exercises an address on study of the minor prophets was delivered by Rev. E. M Lightfoot, of Waynesville, followed by an address by Dr. D. W. Key, of Greenville, S. C., on "qualification for ordination." Rev. E. M. Lightfoot next addressed the audience on "how I prepare my sermons." Twilight services were held in the tabernacle at 7:30, followed by services in the church, where Rev. E. M. Lightfoot made an address on the "book of Jonah, followed by Rev. W. M. Vines, of Asheville, on "Paul's conception of Christian Life." The interest in the meetings seems to be increasing, and there was quite a large gathering last night. Several more distinguished speakers have arrived, and more are expected. Brother Spillman is still much indisposed, but it is much to be hoped that will soon rally and be out again. J. C. S.

The forthcoming annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Evans, will show a grand total of 993,529 pensioners on the rolls on July 1st last.

On July 1, 1899, there were 991,519 pensioners. During the year 40,545 original pensions were granted and 4,799 names were restored to the rolls. To offset these 43,334 names were dropped, including 35,809 by death, 909 by remarriages of pensioners. and 6,616 for other causes, leaving the total number 993,529, an increase of 2,010 pensioners for the year.

The number of claims of all kinds pending July 1st was 437,104, against 477,939 on July 1899.

George Gould attended a meeting of the Union Pacific railroad directors a few days ago and lighted a cigarette. "Drop that cigarette," said Chairman Harriman. "have issued an order forbidding employes to smoke cigarettes. You are an employe: you get $10 for attending one of these meetings. You, too, Mr. Schiff," addressing another millionaire director who was toying a lighted perfecto. "We directors must not make rules for employes and then break them ourselves." The distinguished employes quietly obeyed orders.

Bishop Charles B. Galloway reports that the Methodist churches in the South have raised nearly $1,000,000 of the $1,500,000 they promised to contribute before January 1, 1901, to the Methodists' twentieth century educational fund, and he has no doubt the whole amount will be secured before the dawn of the new century.

So loudly roared the Briton bold.
Then jeering and sneering

And boasting and roasting,
And staring and daring,
And bluffing and puffing,
And bragging and nagging,
And guying and prying,
Each other defying,
The allies are lying in ancient Tien Tsin!

Referring to a statement which has been going the rounds of the press to the effect that the late Judge Trippe was the last of the Confederate Congressmen, the Macon Telegraph points out that there are at least five men now living who were members of the two Congresses of the Confederacy. Senator George G. Vest, of Missouri, and ex-Senator James L. Pugh, of Alabama, were of the first and second Congresses, and Mr. Vest was a Senator in the second Congress; Hon. J. L. M. Curry and Judge Roger A. Pryor, of New York, were both representatives in the first Congress, the former from Alabama and the latter from Virginia; Hon. A. S. Colyar, of Nashville represented a Tennessee district in the second Congress.

FRIDAY AUGUST 3, 1900.

THE RESULT.

The landslide yesterday in favor of the amendment and the Democratic ticket is greater than any of the most sanguine and enthusiastic expected. The Charlotte Observer of last Sunday put the majority at 42,000, after a careful inquiry. At that time, even, this was considered at her a large estimate. The whole bottom simply fell out of the opposition.

It was a great day for North Carolina. The people have spoken in unmistakable tones. It was, too, the voice of the white people. They have said, and will never have to eat their words, that negro rule administered by scalawags and Butlerism and Holtonism are dead in North Carolina. Their rule has been the worst possible. It was simply the worse element of society ruling the better. And when this happens the tale is too well known to be repeated here. It was a wonderful and unusual series of mishaps that put the State in that condition, and the work begun in 1898 and so magnificently completed yesterday was but the ineyitable return to the natural conditions of things.

It was not a party victory; it was a victory for society in its right to perpetuate itself in stability and tranquility. It was not a victory over the negro, but one in his behalf. Thinking people have not fought the fight in enmity to him. To do so would have been unworthy of the superior race. The peace and quiet which reigned yesterday throughout the entire State is an earnest of that tranquility that the day's work inaugurates.

What of the courts? Ah, that was the cry of the vanquished and will amount to nothing. So overwhelming and unmistakable, the country will look with unfriendliness upon any movement to tear up the results by courts. Of course there are constitutions, and courts must say what is constitutional, but public sentiment in this country is the final authority behind the courts, and even constitutions.

It was a glorious day for North Carolina, for peace and happiness, for civilzation and religion, for society and social institutions, for the white race and for the black race.

The overwhelming defeat in Guilford of the dispensary system of controlling liquor in Greensboro does not cause the Telegram to change its opinion that this is the best method yet proposed for selling whiskey; neither does it cause us to believe that that verdict is the best for this community, or make us regret having stood for what we believed right. The vote, though, does unmistakably show that the majority are against the dispensary, and so—REQUIESCAT IN PACE.

Realizing that the people are more interested in the election news than anything else, we print this morning in order to give it to them at the earliest possible moment. There will not be any further issue of the paper today unless some very important news comes in, in which case an extra will be printed. While the figures are not complete, the result is so sure that our news this morning will be found very nearly sufficient.

REFUSED TO SAY MORE.

Butler Says His Challenge to Congressman Bellamy is Sufficiently Plain.

Special Dispatch to the Telegram.

Raleigh, Aug. 2.—Senator Marion Butler, Populist State Chairman, was tonight asked by the Chicago Times-Herald for an interview on his challenge to Congressman Bellamy to drive him from the State. In reply Butler said:

"I have nothing to say further than what was contained in my letter to Mr. Bellamy, in which I suggested that he attempt the job of running me out of the State, if he thought my absence from North Carolina necessary or desirable. My language was sufficiently plain, and I have no more to say."

The letter sent by Butler to Congressman Bellamy is as given herewith:

Hon. J. D. Bellamy, Wilmington, N. C.

Sir: You are quoted in the Raleigh morning papers as saying, in a speech at Wilmington yesterday, that the Democrats should forcibly expel me from the State. Do you mean that you feel it your duty to forcibly expel me from the State, or do you mean that some one else should do it? Do you mean that one man should undertake it, or that a cowardly, lawless mob should do it? Now, if you think I should be expelled from the State, I suggest that you undertake the job yourself. You are one man and I am one man. If you mean what you say, and have any courage (except when you have a mob of red shirts behind you), I suggest that you proceed to Raleigh and begin the expelling business at once. If you have not courage to undertake this job, then I suggest that you have the decency to keep your mouth shut. Respectfully,

MARION BUTLER, Chairman.

BELLAMY'S REPLY.

Congressman Bellamy replied as follows:

"Hon Marion Butler:

Sir.—Your insolent letter does not deserve a reply, as I shall not be-foul myself by having a controversy with the most despised and contemptible creature in this State.

(Signed) "JOHN D. BELLAMY."

Boots and Shoes.

A word as to the care of boots. We are just now buying new ones and putting by those we wore in the summer and early autumn. It is well, if we can, to get boots two months before one wants them, so that the leather may be seasoned, to rub them all over, soles too, with vaseline, and then put them by until needed. Boot trees, made specially by the maker of whom we buy our boots, and not bought promiscuously, are a necessity. Banana and orange juice are capital polishers, and so is a mixture of cream and blue-black ink, in equal quantities. Patent leather cleans well with cream and new milk. Finally, never dry wet boots by the fire, but put them where the wind may blow upon them.

Care of Veils.

The beauty and freshness of a veil can be preserved for a long time if it is properly cared for. After wearing it should be smoothed out carefully and rolled between paper or over a rod. A piece of broomstick makes an excellent roller.

A veil which has become limp can be freshened by dipping it in weak gum water and pulling it straight before it dries.

is where we stand in the lumber business. At the kicking post, as it were, in regard to prices.

First comes the owner of the timber. He just woke up to the value of it and wants double last year's prices. Then the sawmill man. He has not been making a fortune and thinks now he should share a little in the general prosperity

They say to us: "We must have so much for our trees and work." After a while it is "up to you." Don't kick. You don't suppose we have nerve enough to put up prices unless they had first been put up on us. No, indeed. But prices are NOT high. They have been to low and are just now getting reasonable. Your children will be glad to build at double the price it now costs you. It is a trite, but true saying, if you want to build, "Now is the time."

Miss Melesin K. Sowles who is only sixteen years old, is probably the youngest woman preacher in the world. Since last June she has been preaching in the Baptist Church, Honey Creek, Wis. Before she was ten years old she developed a great interest in theology. She speaks with great simplicity and earnestness.

Thrown upon her own resources some time ago, Mrs. Clara L. Kellog decided to support herself by teaching embroidery. She thoroughly prepared herself for this work by a trip to Europe, where she visited museums, cathedrals and convents where were rare pieces of tapestry and embroidery. She now has a large business, which employs fifty women and owns property valued at $75,000.

Some years ago Mrs. Emily Talbot, of Boston, originated the idea of an Association of Colegiate Alumnae, which should advance educational methods, encourage girls in more definite aims and teach college-bred women to make their superior training count for more in bettering social conditions. The organization was formed and now numbers 2,000 women from all parts of the country.

Florence Nightingale now spends all her time in bed or on a couch, but has all the papers read to her, in order to get the news from the Transvaal.

AUTOMOBILE PALACE.

Magnificent Car for Long Trips Upon Pleasant Byways.

Railroad palace cars are a familiar sight to the public, but a car of like proportions, and something similar in appearance and design that will speed along the country roads from 20 to 35 miles an hour is the latest creation of Yankee skill and Yankee ingenuity.

Mr. S. C. Coombs, of Philadelphia, is the inventor in that line of automobiles.

The car has a four-wheeled truck under each end set a short distance back from the ends, thereby bringing the weight of the car as near the engine as practicable in a car 65 feet long. The wheels are four feet high, each truck is constructed with heavy springs and fifth wheel, like a heavy circus wagon. Each wheel is fitted with the heaviest and best solid rubber tire that can be produced, which will relieve the wheel and axle from heavy jar when in rapid motion. The four-wheel truck at each end gives the car great stability, because if one wheel drops in a hole or crevasse the companion wheel on the same side will maintain the balance of the car and also distribute the weight over a larger surface on the ground, giving the car better foothold, as it were, on soft roads or climbing hills.

Mr. Coombs's manner of communicating power to the wheels from the motor is where his engineering qualities show themselves. The wheels all work independently of each other, the same as any automobile, yet they are all operated by means of two heavy cables direct from the motor, The car has a steering arrangement at each end—both ends of the car are alike. The car runs either way, and around short curves and in turns the rear wheels follow in the same track as the front wheels, and the car is guided either way by the same steering arrangement, the car having a pilot at each end. The car positively will not upset on any road.

There are two staterooms in the car, furnished with closets and baths. The bath tubs are let down in this space, and are even with the under side of the floor, a section of the floor being constructed to cover it. The butler's pantry is fitted with every modern culinary device. Some of the space of the car is divided off with partitions like folding blinds, making it possible to throw two or three rooms into one. The car is pointed at either end to minimize atmosphere resistance. The car cannot upset, for it can be seen that material and baggage carried is near the ground, like ballast in the bottom of a ship.

"I represented this undertaking to Mr. Roswell P. Flower 12 years ago," said Mr. Coombs, "while I resided at Watertown, but the idea was too advanced then.—Cin. Enquirer.

USE OF DOGS IN WAR.

Result of the Experiments Made By the German Army.

The use of dogs in war dates back to the Greeks and Romans, but the modern idea of training them for special military service was born in 1886 in Germany, and for the past 10 or 12 years each battalion of German jagers has had eight or ten dogs assigned to it for this training. The two or three dogs thus falling to each company are placed under the care of a noncommissioned officer and two men, and each regiment has an officer detailed to superintend their instruction.

The dog is to be used for various special duties, such as the service of information and security or scouting, on marches and reconnoissances and in patrol, sentinel duty with the outposts, as messengers on both these duties, as carriers of supplies and ammunition on the battlefield, and to hunt up the wounded after battle.

To test the results thus far obtained a number of dogs belonging to various regiments were assembled at Oels, in Prussian Silesia, in last July for trial. There were sixteen dogs in all, six of them under two years old. They were tried on the following points: Conduct as watch dog, return from patrol to master, going from master to patrol, following master by scent alone, and lying down. The first point was tested by placing the dog with his master at an outpost giving only a limited view and then causing two jagers (in enemy's uniform) to approach under cover from a point about 400 yards distant. The second and third points were tested by sending four dogs at one time from an outpost (or patrol) to four different sentinels, then back again to the outpost (or patrol), back again to the sentinel, and once more to the outpost (or patrol), the latter having meanwhile changed its position.

The various points were given values, and one of the dogs received 96 out of a possible 100. The dogs were of different breeds and crosses, but the best were collies and shepherd dogs. The average rate of travel of the dogs as messengers was about 9½ miles an hour.—N. Y. Sun.

HIS LIFE WAS SAVED.

Mr. J. E. Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal, Mo., lately had a wonderful deliverance from death. In telling of it he says: "I was taken with typhoid fever that ran into pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected to soon die of consumption, when I heard of Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave great relief. I continued to use it and now am well and strong. I can't say too much in its praise." This marvellous medicine is the surest and quickest cure in the world for all throat and lung trouble. Regular sizes 50 cents and $1.00. Trial bottles free at C. E. Holton's drug

A FEW ANIMAL NOTES

THINGS A CLOSE OBSERVER HAS FOUND BY EXPERIENCE.

Something About Game Birds.—A Fox's Brush.—The Vixen.—Peculiar Acts of the Mother Fawn.—Ill Tempered Horses—Mules are Cads.

Every game bird, in its native haunts, has a habit of association which is differently expressed. Thus sportsmen who know, say a bevy of partridges, a covey of quail, a bunch of prairie chicken, a plump of wild fowl, a wisp of teal, either green or blue winged, a file of geese, a flight of pigeons, or woodcock, a line of snipe. Pheasants are so nearly domesticated they are said to come in clutches, rail and plover in balls, and cranes and heron in slants.

Everybody knows that a fox's tail is in hunting parlance his brush, but few perhaps know further that his scalp is technically a "mask," or that if he is superlatively game, it is torn off, nailed on the kennel door of the pack in at his death, and marked with three crosses to show that he died only at the end of a ringing run. The brush, of course, goes to whoever is nearest when it is taken. The trophy next in value is the right forefoot—in hunting phrase "pad thief." The left forefoot "pad mino," ranks next. After them the hind feet, "the pegs"—which only very young or very avid hunters care much to claim.

One amazing thing regarding the vixen—the she fox—is that no dog will follow her trail while she carries young. It is uncertain whether she then leaves no scent, or whether the dogs obey some primal instinct, in passing over her track. A certain consideration for the female is apparent in most of canine species. One of the surest signs of rabies is for a dog to attack a bitch of his own species.

Fawns when first dropped are for some hours unable to stand. The dog does not remain beside them, but paces slowly around at a considerable distance. Every now and then she gives a little tremulous bleating call, at sound of which the fawn lifts its head and tries to struggle to its feet. Should a man or dog appear meantime, the doe runs away in a straight line, but laggingly and halting as though herself hurt unto death. When she thinks she has lured the enemy far enough away, she gives three great flying leaps, which take her at once out of sight and goes back to her baby upon seven-league boots. But if left undisturbed, she keeps up the pacing until she sees the fawn standing, then paces daintily away in a straight line, choosing always the easiest grade. As she paces she calls faintly and every now and then halts, looking over her shoulder, to see that she is followed.

Ill tempered old horses delight to attack very young foals and will kill them if permitted. Mules have the same cheerful habit, unless they are under the influence of "the bell mare." She is the queen of the herd—a kindly creature who has grazed and fed with them, wearing a tinkling bell about her neck. If she snorts defiance of anything, all her followers rush to the attack. If she sniffs tolerance, they pass it by. In all things they obey her abjectly. Back in the old days, when horses and mules throughout the southwest went to market in droves, the rough riding highwayman of that epoch always tried to capture "the bell" and make off with it, knowing that nothing could keep the drove from following. Similarly, drovers tried to save the "bell." She was led, never ridden, so that in event of attack, she might be fresh for a game run. A light lad led her—the owner or chief drover brought up the rear. The lad had strict orders at the first sign of trouble to go his very best, caring for nothing but "the bell."

Mules are on the whole something of cads. They are very proud of their horse kin-folk and very much ashamed of the other side of their ancestry. One horse in a lot full of mules is a royal personage. Poor Neddy, contrariwise, is kicked and cuffed, and nipped most cruelly.—Exchange.

OUR WEAKNESS.

According to the Verdict of a Well-Known Physician.

"It's not the biggest accidents, bad colds and the germs of disease which are in every human being which are responsible for the pain and sorrow in the world which follows in the tracks of illness," said a leading physician, "but the crass foolishness of the ordinary man.

"Now, nearly every one knows that when he crosses his legs he is inviting dyspepsia. Yet, does he desist? You have a slight cough, and instead of trying to stop it you inflame your throat by coughing as hard as you can, although you have been told time and again that by so doing you are only aggravating it. To please your vanity you wear boots and shoes that do not fit you. Out of pure carelessness you sit in an unhealthy position at table and at your desk; you eat food which you know does not agree with you; you drink a large tumbler of water before a meal because, like a child, your reason is not stronger than your thirst; you go away from a hot fire into the night air, and then grumble at catching a cold; you smoke too much, stay indoors too much or take too much exercise, and then come grumbling to us doctors to make a new man of you. I often feel when some man, whose physique I can see must have been perfect, comes to me a hopeless wreck that the best kind of physic would be the rod, served very hot."

"Twenty-four Carats Fine."

Twenty-four carat gold is all gold; twenty-two carat gold has twenty-two parts of gold, one of silver and one of copper; eighteen carat gold has eighteen parts of pure gold and three parts each of silver and copper in its composition; twelve carat gold is half gold, the remainder being made up of three and a half parts of silver and eight and a half parts of copper.

DOG A DETECTIVE.

Animal Belonging to the Police at Shanghai Gave Valuable Aid.

There has just died in the central police station in Shanghai perhaps one of the most faithful and intelligent animals of the dumb creation, and one which was truly regarded by the Shanghai police as the "policemen's dog," a mute but sagacious companion, whose death has been regretted by the whole force. Nigger at his death was 25 years old, eleven of which he had served in the Shanghai police force. His record in the service shows that he has actually been in both the public and the secret departments of the police, and had been the means of effecting the arrest of many notorious criminals. Nigger, remarks the China Gazette, was a personality in the force, petted as much by the superintendent as he was by constables, both European and native. He was moreover, part and parcel of them, for he visited them on their usual beats, was patted, and with a gentle tail wag traveled onward to meet the next officer. The dog, too, became a general favorite, because he used to remain out on "night duty," and never considered that his patrol was up till the morning round was finished. When he was on night duty he used to enter the station at 3 o'clock to get his coffee. After that Nigger would trot out again and continue his round till morning. An inspector of the police force, speaking of the death of the dog, states that he was as good as a detective, and that on many occasions Nigger had been the means of arresting lawbreakers in cases where the police had failed.

Several notable instances are recorded. It is well known that Nigger secured the arrest of a criminal who escaped from the Hong-Kew police station. The convict was in for a term of years, and his escape from the station was apparently unperceived until Nigger took up the chase. The dog pursued the man for two miles, the while biting him on the heels. The runaway dropped and the police came upon him. One of the most remarkable instances of canine fidelity perhaps in modern times was this: About three months ago two European police officers were going up the Nanking road at about midnight. Nigger, who had been with them, was missed. A few minutes afterward the animal made its reappearance, when it began pawing at the legs of its master, Sergeant Madsen, who knew then there was something wrong. Both officers proceeded to ascertain post, piloted by Nigger, who at once put his front paws against the door of a house and returned to scratch his master. The dog again went to the door and actually by his front paws burst it open, and then it was that the officers discovered a criminal who was on private property for the supposed purpose of committing a felony and who was subsequently convicted and sentenced to three months' hard labor.

These are among the many acts which made Nigger's name famous in Shanghai, not only among the members of the police force, but among many private residents who knew him by his reputation. The Shanghai police force is inconsolable. The funeral was attended by six constables and a sergeant.—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE ANGLER FISH.

His Mammoth Mouth Snaps on Whatever Touches the Projecting Fin.

Most remarkable of strange fishes is the angler-fish, whose very name seems a paradox. The fishing-fish, nevertheless, is a reality, and a stern one to all who approach those awful jaws of his. With a body the color of mud he genrally lies in the shadow of some rock on the bottom of the sea, waiting motionless for the approach of his prey. He is provided with an odd kind of fin just over the mouth, and this is held out in front of him to give warning of the coming of something to be swallowed. One taken alive was experimented on, and it was found that if this projecting fin was touched with a stick, even though the stick did not come near the mouth, the jaws closed convulsively. This shows that the fin by some provision of nature closes the jaw as soon as it is touched. The mouth is tremendous, growing to the width of a foot when the whole fish is only three feet long. One of these anglers was caught not long since, and though it was only tweny-five inches long, a fish fiften inches long was found sticking in its throat. The angler is provided with peculiar teeth set in double or treble rows along the jaws and at the entrance of the throat. Some of these teeth are a foot long. He is not a pretty fish to look at, but he attends strictly to business and will swallow anything that touches his warning fin, whether it is meant for food or not. All kinds of things have been found in the stomachs of anglers, from bits of lead and stone to fish almost as large as the angler itself. This is without doubt one of the most peculiar and interesting fish in the whole ocean.—N. Y. Sun.

Glossy Hair.

The use of this shampoo will keep the hair in perfect condition, rendering it soft and glossy:—Shake the yolk of an egg in half a pint of alcohol till thoroughly mixed. Strain, and you will have a clear fluid left, which will keep for an indefinite period. Into each basin of water used for washing the hair put one or two tablespoonfuls of this liquid. Rub well into the scalp and through the hair. Rinse in clean warm water. Rub with a linen towel till partly dry, and then take a large Japanese fan and fan vigorously till perfectly dry, when the hair will be delightfully soft and glossy.

EXTRA EDITION

The readers of The Telegram may be assured that they have had an election service equal in all respects to that furnished by any newspaper in North Carolina. So far back as our regular edition at five o'clock yesterday afternoon, we gave an accurate forecast of what the figures would be, and ascertained that the election was everywhere passing as quietly as a Sabbath day. Our regular edition for today was issued at 5 o'clock this morning and gave practically the same figures which are being confirmed today. There was a pretty full report of the county returns and the officicial figures of all precincts that had made up and sent in their returns. There were also reports from seventy of the counties of the State, the figures being largely accurate and many of them official. In the extra edition we are publishing this afernoon we give the latest reports from other counties, and also the last estimate of the total majority.

CONGER DISPATCH CONFIRED.

When Consul Fowler Heard that the Dispatch was Doubted He Sentand Obtained the Original Copy.

By Wire to the Telegram.

Washington, Aug. 3—The State Department has received a dispatch from Consul Fowler at Chefoo dated the night of the second, stating that when he learned from the Shanghai papers that doubts were entertained as to the genuineness of the Conger cipher telegram, he wired July 27. to the Governor of Shantung to send him the original by courier. The Governor immediately responded, sending a special postman who, travelling night and day,, made the journey in five days which in ordinary times taken twelve days. He delivered to Fowler the original Conger dispatch signed, Conger, and dated July 17. It was precisely the same as the message received by the State Department with several words prefixed, which came in a unintelligible form to Chinese legation here. The dispatch in its complete form says that the members of the American legation were beseiged a month in the British legation. Fowler has no doubt of the genuineness of dispatch.

Lana's part was to kill the Queen at Ivra at the same time Bresci killed the King at Monza. The plot failed partially as Bresci carried his part into execution before Lana had a a chance to act.

DISENCHANTMENT.

I used to think her beautiful and wise,
I used to think she had an angel's face;
I thought that she would make a paradise
Of earth's most dismal, dark and dreary place.

I wonder as I look at her to-day,
How I ever could have thought her so supreme;
Her wisdom's taken wings and flown away
Her beauty was an evanescent dream.

There is nothing sweet or winsome in her look,
She has not a single charm that I can see,
And she took her lack of wisdom when she took Another man in preference to me.

THE SILVER BROCADE

It was so stiff it could literally stand alone. The groundwork was as white as alabaster. It was powdered with argent dots placed so closely together that the effect was a shimmering, silvery surface, indescribably beautiful.

Lady Betty Dufferin wore it first at one of George IV.'s levees. Her portrait was painted in it. A cherry-lipped, saucy-nosed, insolent-eyed beauty was Lady Betty, and a flame, it was said, of His Royal Highness.

Her descendants brought it to Virginia, where it was rustled through many a stately minuet over polished floors under the soft light of waxen candles in sconce and chandelier. It finally came into the possession of the famous Dufferin twins, who fought desperately over it, and were consumed with vexation because their mother refused to allow either to appear in it, inasmuch as it was her hobby to dress both these beautiful girls exactly alike, and there was not enough of the brocade to go round.

One of Alva Dufferin's daughters, however, wore it at White Sulphur Springs one summer in the sixties, and created havoc wherever she stepped. She was the counterfeit representation of her illustrious ancestress, Lady Betty, and appeared to have inherited many of the traits of that frolicsome dame. It was she who, clad in the silver brocade, pulled off her satin slipper and, filling it with champagne, gave it to one of her adorers, while the rest nearly came to blows over the question who could secure the other tiny flagon. Thus Betty Dufferin had a flamboyant and checkered career. The least said about it here the better.

Her grandchild, an exquisite slip of a girl, ran away with a strolling actor, a pictureque vagabond, and went upon the stage. She made over the silver brocade, which had fallen to her, into a stage gown for a society play. She wore it with great eclat on the opening night, and the leading man walked up the back breadths and tore it off the waist. Thereupon Miss Julia Devereux fainted with vexation and the curtain was rung down.

Next day, in a fret, the actress gave the still beautiful fabric to her maid, who promptly took it to a funny little shop near Varick sreet and concluded a bargain with a daughter of Israel.

And here "Dick" Fanshaw found it.

No one ever knew from what corner of the habitable globe came "Dick" Fanshaw and his beautiful wife. They spoke as familiarly of Monte Carlo and Paris as they did of Mexico and the Klondike. She had been used to luxury—that was apparent—even if now she did not possess it. She carried about her an air of faded splendor, and the somewhat passe costumes of the lovely woman always retained a vestige of elegance.

Mrs. Fanshaw was one of those splendid creatures for whom superb dress would seem to have been invented. She was a veritable Juno, with wonderful hair the exact tint of old copper and eyes the exact tint of old blue china. She was far more refined in her manner and bearing than was her husband. Her proud, sensitive face grew often scornful and mutinous as she regarded her swarthy, evil-looking lord. That she barely tolerated his presence was plain enough to see.

One could not blame her when one seriously studied the face of "Dick" Fanshaw. He had the air of a brigand. His hair was the coarse blue-black of the Orient, and his eyes were like smoldering fires. A frightful mustache, ocstentatiously and elaborately curled, and a short, thick nose, added to his forbidding and sinister appearance. He was addicted to wearing flashy jewelry when he could afford it, and his slouch hats and vivid neckties were awful to behold.

But there was one thing about "Dick" Fanshaw that all the men agreed that sat at the card table with him. He had the true gambler's nerve. He was just as cool and self-contained when he was losing as when he was winning. In fact, his apparent indifference to money was magnificent. One watching his inscrutable face and coldblooded manner as he shuffled and dealt a hand that meant defeat for him would have said: "Why, money means nothing to this man. He is playing merely for the fun of the thing."

But in Fanshaw's circle it was quite well understood that the gambler was in desperate straits. For months he had lost steadily, recouping now and then enough to keep him still in the game.

The Fanshaws had modest apartments half way up town, in a neighborhood of not unblemished reputation. They lived—Heaven knows how. There were frequent quarrels between the handsome, high-spirited woman and the heavy-browed, fiery-eyed husband. Mrs. Fanshaw often carried traces of tears upon her face, and sometimes a red mark upon her cheek, as from five angry fingers. The gossip of the house ran that men came to the apartments as much to look at the beauty as to play cards with the beast.

At all events, the Fanshaws belonged to that strange intermediary world where everyone lives by his wits. That the husband was a rank adventurer it needed no profound sagacity to discern. That the wife was a beautiful, unhappy woman, immeasurably his superior, was also apparent at a glance.

Night after night Mrs. Fanshaw sat in her tiny sitting room watching a group of gamblers through the curtained doorway that led into her husband's smoking room. She had no other occupation but to make herself as attractive as her limited purse would permit. She had no woman friends for her husband would not allow her to receive any one save the men he brought to their apartments. She never went out unless Fanshaw, suspicious and sardonic, walked at her side.

The poor woman was virtually a prisoner. Her beauty was used by her husband to lure men to his table. His rabid jealously, however, protected her. Fanshaw's guests were content to admire his wife at a safe distance.

One night there came a new victim to the gambler's table. He was a stalwart, handsome, pink-cheeked boy, with honest blue eyes and a good, clean pair of lips. He was seeing life. He had "money to burn," one of Fanshaw's familiars informed the gambler. He burned it in Fanshaw's flat.

He came again and again. It was soon palpable to all that the copper-haired woman had bewitched the boy. He was simply infatuated with her beauty and grace. But in vain did he try to get speech alone with Mrs. Fanshaw. The dull, smoldering eyes of Mrs. Fanshaw's husband were ever upon the pair.

One night Harry Gilette, the lamb who was slowly but surely being fleeced by the wolves in the little uptown flat, slipped a note in Mrs. Fanshaw's hand. She cast one frightened, imploring look at her husband, who, she well knew, had seen the transaction. She tucked the note away in the lace of her corsage and in sheer desperation faced the reckoning she knew was impending.

When the last guest had departed, Fanshaw, who had lost, and consequently was in an ugly mood, turned savagely on his wife. "Give it to me," he demanded peremptorily. She obeyed.

He read it, and then, lifting his dull, heavy eyes, said: "Men do not write such notes unless they are encouraged——"

"Dick, I never——"

"Of course not. Women never do. Now listen. For this I will squeeze the very blood out of that fellow's veins. Any one can see that he is mad about you. Damn him."

He flung the note in her lap. "Read it!" he commanded. She read.

"Dear Mrs. Fanshaw: You look so wretched, so unhappy, that it really makes my heart ache. Is there any way I can help you? Is Fanshaw as cruel to you as every one says? Do let me befriend you. Yours,

"Dick," she said bravely, "that is not a love letter. The man is simply sorry for me. That's the first kind words I have had for years."

"Well, it's the last you'll have for years," Fanshaw retorted; "so every one says I'm cruel to you. By God, if I've the name I'll have the game. Answer that note. Answer it, I say!" as his wife shrunk back before the look in his face. "Tell your lover that you are wretched and that your only happiness is to see him here every night."

"Oh, Dick, I cannot," she moaned.

"You will do as I command you," Fanshaw replied, his smoldering eyes on hers. "How dare you tell me you cannot?"

Two days after this encounter, Fanshaw came home looking as genial as possible for him. He tossed a parcel into his wife's lap as she sat silent, lonely, brooding. "There; take that," he said, "and fix it up and make yourself as pretty as you can when the boys are here."

She opened the package and repressed a cry of plasure. The silver brocade fell out. The sheen and sparkle of the splendid fabric would have appealed to any woman. Mrs. Fanshaw was quite touched by her husband's gift. She rose to give him a timid caress, but he pushed her aside, and, going to a desk in the corner of his den took a pack of cards from an inner drawer.

The woman who was watching him, grew pale. She had not seen him bring out that pack for years. She crossed the room and looked over his shoulder as he sat there fumbling and studying them. "Dick," she cried, "what are you going to do?"

"Do?" he growled. "I'm going to do your friend. I see his finish."

Mrs. Fanshaw turned without a word and went back to her work. But a new light crept in her soft, deep eyes and resolute lines curled the corners of her lips.

The next night she stood before her dressing table and regarded her beauty with mournful intensity. Of what avail had it been to her? What had it brought her but misery? And to-night a prescience of something terrible lay upon her, a gloom she could not shake off. With a sigh she patted her beautiful hair and tried to smooth the lines that were beginning to creep around her red lips—lips formed for love and kisses, but drooping now in pathetic curves.

The old silver brocade became her marvelously. She had resurrected a few yards of cobwebby lace, remnant of former grandeur. These she had draped about her perfect shoulders, rising white as marble from the filmy meshes. She had no ornaments, nor did her beauty require them.

When Gillette came in that evening he gave a palpable start as the superb woman rose to greet him. He had never dreamed she was so beautiful.

"Will you accpt these?" he asked, proffering her a huge bunch of Parma violets.

Mrs. Fanshaw took them with delight. She inhaled their perfume with ecstacy. Then she pinned them on her breast.

Fanshaw watched this little scene with lowering brows, but offered no objection to his wife's reception of the flowers. As he passed from the den to the sitting room his wife managed to whisper to Gillette, "Do not play to-night. The cards are marked."

"Come, Gillette, we are waiting," Fanshaw called a few moments later, when all the men had taken their places at the table.

"Oh, yes—er—thanks, old man," replied Gilette airily, "but I'm afraid I'll have to deny myself the pleasure tonight. I've got an awful important engagement, and only ran in to see how you are. Good night, fellows. Good night, Mrs. Fanshaw."

He had bowed himself from the room before Fanshaw realized that he was balked of his prey. His face was not good to see, as he said coolly, "Oh, vry well, we'll have to do without him, then."

They were all gone.

Fanshaw turned the key in the door and faced his wife.

The devil looked out of his gloomy eyes. He devoured her with his glance—this radiant ,beautiful creature—his—and yet not his—so far away and so far above him. At that moment he knew not whether he loved or hated her.

Suddenly he extinguished the gas. The room was now in darkness, save where the flickering fire from the open grate played upon the rug where his wife stod like a white, cold statue.

He came nearer. Then as he stood before her he fiercly tore the violets from her breast and threw them on the floor. She regarded him with passive contempt.

"You warned your lover," he said hoarsely.

The woman raised her head proudly. "Dick," she said, "I object to that word. Mr. Gillette has shown me only kindness and civility. He is no lover."

"Why, then, did you warn him? Do you know, you babbling fool, that he brought thousands of dollars with him here to-night, which, but for your damnable interference, would have been mine?"

"Dick," she said, and there was a plaintiff little note in her voice, "I am a degraded woman, but I have not fallen so low as that."

Fanshaw crouched like a panther. "Do you know," he whispered, "that I am going to kill you?"

She laughed. "That is the best news I have heard for a long time," she said, disdainfully. "I hope it is true."

The dying firelight touched her soft, white bosom and showed him where to strike. She trembled, screamed once, then sank a limp, inert mass, face downward on the floor.

Now the gambler's nerve forsook him. The knife dropped from his trembling fingers and rattled down upon the hearth. At the sound his heart leaped to his throat. But the woman did not stir.

He crept, sick and shuddering, to the buffet in the adjoining room and poured out a glass of brandy. Once he looked back, fearfully, over his shoulder and listened. But there was no sound from the silent room beyond.

The brandy revived him. He passed from the dining-room into the hall. Nothing would have induced him to re-enter that room. He took his coat and hat from the rack and, hastily opening the door, stepped out into the brightly lighted hall of the apartment house, and stepped out straight intc the arms of Gilette and the stalwart police captain of the precinct, who lived on the top floor.

Gilette had been worried over the look on Fanshaw's face when he had left the flat. He had hung about the street all the evening, and had heard that one wild, piercing scream. Going hastily to the station house, just around the corner, he had confided his fears to the captain, and the two had come together to investigate. As they reached the top stair they were confronted by a haggard, trembling man, with shifty eyes and limp hands, vainly trying to thrust his shaking arms into his overcoat.

When the captain forced Fanshaw to the side of the inert heap of lace and brocade, he snarled like a wild beast as he saw his dead wife's sweet face—her very lips—pressed close to a huge cluster of Palma violets, slowly withering upon the blood-soaked floor.—Edith Sessions Tupper, in N. Y. Herald.

Furs and No Furs.

Women who wear furs should be especially particular as to their methods of dispensing with them for certain costumes. It almost invariably invites a cold, unless some precaution is taken, and even then there is considerable risk for women who are not strong, says the Criterion. A year or two ago, when the hideous little mink collars were worn with claws, head and tail in evidence, physicians declared that diphtheria, sore throats and pleurisy flourished as never before. Most women insist on dressing inadequately for cold weather, for the reason that heavy clothing is not pretty as a rule. For this reason colds begin to attack femininity about this time of year and remain until the winter is ended. My lady goes about daintily through the cold, months, proudly conscious that although wintry winds blow cold, her inner garmenting expresses summer's airiest frivolity. Any number of women wear low shoes and silk hosiery throughout the winter without the protection of a cloth gaiter.

THE HOUSEHOLD

A FEW RECIPES.

White Mountain Cake.

One cupful of butter, three cupfuls sugar, one pint flour, one and a half teaspoonfuls baking powder, whites of six eggs, one cupful of milk, 20 drops extract bitter almonds. Rub butter and sugar to light, white cream add the six whites, whipped to dry froth, the flour, sifted with the powder, the milk, and extract: mix together thoroughly, but carefully, and bake in jelly cake tins in a quick oven 15 minutes; then arrange in layers with white icing and grated cocoanut mixed in the proportion of two cupfuls of former to one of latter.

French Omelette.

Take four eggs, separate the yolks from the whites. Beat the whites to a snow on a dinner plate; then beat the yolks in small basin, with sugar to taste then add a small pinch of baking powder and three large tablespoonfuls of flour, and milk enough to make a thin batter. Then pour into an omelette pan, previously heated and greased. Spread the white over the top. Fry by holding high above the fire till set brown on the top; double over and serve hot with jam.

Potatoes, Lyonnaise.

Parboil a dozen or more potatoes at breakfast time and set aside after you have peeled them, as they should get perfectly cold. When you are ready to cook them heat some butter or good dripping in frying-pan; fry in it one small onion chopped fine, until it begins to change color—say, one minute or more. Then put in potatoes, cut into small squares (like dice), not too thick or broad. Stir well and cook five minutes, taking care potatoes do not break to pieces. They must not brown. Put in some minced parsley just before taking up. Drain dry by shaking in a heated pan.

Fruits For Center Piece.

Place in the center of the dining table half of a yellow pumpkin, hollowed to form a bowl, filled with pears, grapes and rosy-cheeked apples. At either end of the table place flower bowls filled with red and yellow chrysanthemums. Arrange vines, caught in the chandelier, in and out among the fruit in the center of the table to the flower bowls at each end of the table.

Celery Salad.

Two bunches celery, one tablespoonful salad oil, four tablespoonfuls vinegar, one small teaspoonful fine sugar; pepper and salt to taste. Wash and scrape celery; lay in ice cold water until dinner time. Then cut into inch lengths, add above seasoning. Stir well together with fork and serve in salad bowl.

Cranberry Jell.

Wash one quart of cranberries, place over the fire with one pound of sugar and cold water enough to cover berries and sugar; let boil one half hour, run through fine sieve and cool in mold.

Saving the Rubber Plant.

Leaves turning yellow on a rubber plant is a sure indication of the bad health of the plant, the most common cause of which is the watering. During the winter season the plant is at a stage of comparative rest, and, therefore, only needs water when the soil begins to get dry. But it must not be allowed to become so dry that the soil will harden, or when it is watered canals or channels through the ball of soil will be the result, and the greater part of the roots will not be moistened at all.

If the soil once hardens, set the plant, pot and all, in a bucket, and fill with water nearly to the top of the pot, letting it remain for several hours.

Another fault is keeping the plant in a jardiniere containing stagnant water. After watering, always empty the jardiniere, or the soil will become sour again, causing the leaves to drop off.

Scented Beds.

It is now not an unsual thing to order that in your mattress of hair or wool shall be placed sachets of the odor you like best. Even if this is not done many housekeepers arrive at nearly the same result by using small flat sachets filled with lavender or violet or orris to slip under the turned down sheet or put in at the tucked in corners above the mattress. The pillow is perfumed by a silk sachet of its own size and shape slipped in on the unused side between the case and the ticking. None of this seems very wise unless the perfume is confined to your own bed—as many persons dislike all perfumes and others are made sick by certain odors. Therefore to perfume a bed for a guest whose idiosyncrasies are not known is dangerous, to say the least.

The Countess Castellane, once Miss Anna Gould, of New York, has the most lovely garden in France. She grows all the old fashioned flowers, which are allowed to overrun everywhere in luxuriant untidiness. One corner of this delightful spot she calls her garden of friendship, and in this she plants all the flowers that are associated in her mind with friends and relatives, each blossom being fragrant with a memory. It is a pretty idea.

A JOLLIFICATION MEETING.

THE CANDIDATES RETURN THANKS

Short Speeches Made by Democracy's Standard Bearers in the Campaign---Mr. Douglas a Philosopher and the "Same Mean Radical"---Everybody in Splendid Humor.

A large crowd gathered in the court house at 12:30 this afternoon to hear the returns read and hear short speeches from the candidates. As a matter of course, everybody was in high spirits. Only one of the defeated Republicans—Mr. R. D Douglas—was present. He made a neat and graceful speech, in the best of humor.

The county officers spoke first, each being enthusiastically applauded. Sheriff Jordan referred to the specially bitter fight made against him and warmly thanked the people who stood by him so loyally.

Mr. Roberson expressed his grateful appreciation of the honor conferred upon him without solicitation on his part. He spoke of the many obstacles the Democrats had to overcome and the strong fight made by revenue and other Federal officers, who resorted to the use of money, whiskey and other questionable methods to carry the election.

When Mr. Douglas appeared in response to loud calls he was cordially greeted and given close attention. He takes his defeat philosophically and said he was as mean a Radical as he had ever been. He announced his intention of remaining in the field, and said that the next campaign would find him on the stump fighting Democrats.

Mr Whitaker made a splendid speech in a few words, thanking the people for what they had done for the Democratic party and good government in North Carolina. He spoke of the friendship and good feeling existing between the candidates.

Gen. Glenn was not present, though loud and repeated calls were made for him.

County Chairman Scales congratulated the Democracy of Guilford on the glorious victory achieved and thanked every Democratic worker for assistance rendered during the campaign. He then read the official returns from those townships from which they had been received.

On motion of Mr. W. R. Land, a rising vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Scales for the able and vigilant manner in which he had conducted the campaign.

THACKER & BROCKMANN.

TOOTH LORE.

Some Interesting Facts About the Dental Functions.

In the great Malagawa temple at Kandy is a tooth attracting pilgrims from far and near. A special mission was sent from Siam to try to purchase this, a supposed tooth of Buddha. An amount equivalent to $250,000 was offered for it. It is not strange that a portion of the human body should be thus worshiped. There are many shrines where teeth are held as objects of worship, inclosed within golden caskets, and rarely exposed to the gaze of the unbelievers.

The average individual values a tooth lightly, even as an object of utility, in its natural setting, and its loss is considered a trival matter, unless it happens to be a front tooth. Not until nearly all the teeth have been destroyed by decay or rmoved by the forceps does one realize what has happened.

When one tooth has been extracted, you have really lost two. Teeth cut and grind. The grinding teeth may be likened to millstones—one acting upon the other. Remove a tooth and the opposing organ is without a function. It has nothing to grind against. It will lengthen slightly, as though in search of a mate, and in the case of the gnawing animals the loss of an incisor usually results in the death of the animal. The opposing tooth, elongating, prevents the use of the remaining teeth, or, as frequently happens to rabbits, the tooth, having no work to do, curves upward until it penetrates the skull. Luckily, our teeth are limited as to their growth.

It is a curious fact that most people in chewing use one side of the mouth more than the other. This can be traced usually to some defect on the unused side; but the habitual use of one side of the mouth is detrimental to the oposite side and the health generally.

"The strength of an organ depends upon its use," applies to the teeth as it does to any other part of the body. The mastication of coarse food may wear the grinding surfaces, but this does not interfere with their function, as is shown by the teeth of the Esquimaux—ground down in many cases to the gum, yet showing no signs of decay. The same condition may be seen in the teeth of the Californian Indian. Nature has provided for the wear of the tooth by pulling from the inside, when the pulp which always occupies the centre of the tooth is approached.

A tooth standing alone in a diseased, unhealthy condition may menace health by its presence, but because one among its fellows is badly attacked by caries, it is folly to have it extracted. In this age there are scientific methods at your command for its preservation. No matter how broken down and useless a tooth may appear, it may be built up and restored in the hands of a skilful dentist with far less comfort than was experienced two years ago, so rapidly is dentistry advancing.

Some people spend a lot of money practicing economy.

To Renovate Black Gloves.

When one is in the habit of wearing black gloves we notice how very quickly they begin to wear white; and long before there is a tear in the kid they are too shabby to put on. But with a little care this state of affairs will never come to pass. As soon as you begin to notice the least sign of white, rub the parts gently, when the glove is on the hand, with a flannel dipped in olive oil and soot. This not only restores the color, but the gloss.

New Opera Bags.

One of the latest uses for the animal head in fur is for an opera bag, a silken or satin pouch being attached and the head forming the lower part of the bag. If one is very vulgar and very rich she may have diamond eyes in her animal's head; if one is vulgar and poor she may have rhinestones, while for the minority is left the simplicity of the regular optical completeness, which loses nothing of its conspicuousness, says the Criterion. These bags form a rather quaint addition to the winter toilet, and, matching the fur trimming or article of attire, give a pleasing note of individuality to the whole costume. A gray fox's head with gray satin attachment, out of which peeped a pair of opera glasses in repousse silver, was seen at the theatre the other evening, the last touch to an effective toilet in the prevailing shade of gray.

ONCE WAS ENOUGH FOR THE TRAVELING MAN.

His Fourth of July Experience With Explosives in a Patriotic Pennsylvania Town Convinced Him That He Did Not Want to Go to War.

The travelingman who sells hardware remarked that he was afraid that he would die of heart disease if he was ever compelled to go to the front. His friends wanted to know what made him think so, and after lighting a fresh cigar he said:

"It was several years ago that I made up my mind never to go to war unless there was great need of men and my decision was not changed.

"Business had been good with me, and landing in a certain Pennsylvania town one Fourth, I determined to take a day off and celebrate the day. The result was that I walked over half the place, attended a picnic in the afternoon, danced until my feet were weary and returned to the hotel for dinner pretty well tired. So far so good, but I did not know where to stop.

"After dinner a man of my acquaintance proposed that we go out to see the fireworks and off we went determined not to lose an hour of our holiday. The fireworks display was to be on top of a high hill, almost a mountain, on the edge of the town, and, as I remember it now, that hill went almost straight up and down. We followed the big crowd, though, and at last reached the top. About every one in town was on the summit of that hill before 9 o'clock, when the display was scheduled to begin, and we were crowded and jostled on all sides.

"In due season some one put a big rocket in place and touched it off. It started with a rush, rose high in the air and exploded. While the sparks were falling all the women said, 'Ah!' long drawn out, and half the folk crowded around to get a better view. There was a woman with a big straw hat right in front of me and I was side-stepping when there was a roar in the middle of the platform where the fireworks were lying. Before any one knew what was wrong a big skyrocket darted over the heads of a thousand or so spectators, so close that they could feel the rush of air following it.

"A moment later a flourpot began to spout unexpectedly and seeing the sparks falling all over the platform most of the spectators decided that it was time for them to go. Yours truly was among the number. I started down the hill on a run and was soon making ten-foot jumps. Even then I was only holding my own with a big fat woman just in front of me and there were some in the crowd who should have been handicapped to make anything like an even race.

"We made a quick trip, that is my friend and myself, but the skyrockets were going much faster. They kept passing over our heads constantly and once a big wheel of some kind sailed by me going toward the bottom of the hill like a runaway. About a hundred yards from the top of the hill there ran a stone wall perhaps four feet high and some of the high-gear sprinters went bang into it. The men and women who did not lose consciousness groaned or screamed when they struck it and hearing the uproar in front of me I slowed up a little and then making out the fence through the darkness vaulted over it with a sigh of relief.

"But my troubles were not ended. It happened that a husky ironworker had chosen shelter behind the fence just when I went over and my feet came down fairly in the middle of his back when I landed. He started to swear like a trooper and half rose to give me a short swing when a skyrocket struck the top of the wall immediately in front of him and stuck there while it sent red and green balls back up the hill in great shape.

"That settled the ironworker. He ducked down in a hurry and before he had time to think of me again I had rolled ten feet away and was sticking to the leeward side of the wall trying to keep my heart from choking me. I succeeded, but it was hard work, and it was really weeks before the effects of my run and the excitement had passed away.

"All the men and women who had passed me in the stampede were keeping as close to the wall as they could, but there others coming and the early arrivals had troubles of their own. Somehow I escaped, but few of the others were so fortunate. The ironworker was a notable example. Less than ten seconds after the heels of my patent leathers had scraped along his back he suffered another accident. This time he had an encounter with a man of near his own weight who came over the fence dragging a small boy with him.

"They both landed on my would-be antagonist and he gave a yell that could be heard above the noise of the explosions and the cries of those in the crowd. Every one who could not see him concluded that a rocket had struck him and the women and girls screamed with renewed energy. No sooner had the man and his boy made their escape than two half-grown girls plunged over the wall and once more the ironworker yelled. One had landed on his head and the other on his outstretched arm. The ironworker would have fought them, but no one ventured to say a word while he held forth. He was a marked man, though and the persons near him made haste to give him a wide berth. They were content that he should suffer alone. Of course, there were other persons trampled upon, but it seemed to me that he had more than his share of hard luck.

"The next morning I learned that one young woman nad been killed by a skyrocket, while several other persons had been hurt. A one-legged tinhorn gambler was declared to be responsible for the premature explosion of the fireworks. After lighting a cigarette it was alleged he threw the burning match into a box of rockets on the platform. I knew nothing about the truth of this, but I decided that week to do a lot of dodging before going to war.'—N. Y. Sun.

Ladies' Circular Skirt.

It is generally understood that plaids, especially the large plaids that are worn this season, show off to better advantage when made up on the bias in a circular skirt. The illustration gives a model skirt designed principally for plaid materials. It is of circular shaping, fits perfectly smooth across the front and over the hips to the centre back. The upper part is sheath fitting, but from the knee down the skirt flares stylishly and falls in graceful folds toward the back. The single box plait is applied narrow at the waist line but flares toward the bottom, where it trains slightly. The close adjustment at the upper portion of this skirt gives much the same effect as the habit skirts, which have been and are still very popular. The closing is effected invisibly at the left side under the plait and a pocket may be conveniently inserted at the opposite side.

Although designed especially for plaid and for double faced materials, this model would be appropriate for cheviot, camel's hair, homespun, venetians or any of the new novelty cloths. The skirt is lined throughout with fine percaline and finished around the lower edge with Donna skirt facing, which comes in all colors and is shaped to fit. To make this skirt in the medium size will require 3¾ yards of material 54 inches wide. MAY MANTON.

THE GROUND SEA.

A Peculiar Condition of the Ocean Which Wrecks Vessels in a Calm.

Many visitors to the coast at this time of the year are sorely puzzled when a boatman either refuss to put off from the shore, or at least to go far from land, on a day when there is no sign of an approaching storm, and the water is only moved by a long and gently rolling swell. Argument is of no avail, and if the old salt is pushed for a reason he will only reply with some cryptogramic remark about "the ground sea," the questioner retiring more bewildered than before.

It is hard to understand how such a gentle swell can presage danger, but to experienced eyes it gives a warning that must be heeded. All along the west and parts of the south coasts of England and Ireland, as well as the west coast of Scotland, uncounted tales are told of ships which on a calm day have been within a few hours caught by a gentle roll of water and finally thrown on a rock-bound shore by the dreaded "ground sea.'

To understand this curious marine phenomenon it must be borne in mind that out on the Atlantic waves are often formed to a height of forty feet. Driven before a heavy gale, these advance at a rate of from thirty to forty miles an hour. Traveling at such a rate they soon get out of the wind-swept area, but even though, for them, the storm is passed, they still roll in fury, their undulations often being felt five hundred miles from the point of their creation.

In the region of the storms these waves are fierce, breaking billows, but as they get further away they settle down into long, rolling ridges, which travel onward in long, unbroken lines, perfectly parallel with each other. Out on the open sea these ridges often stretch out for a distance of over thirty miles, and as they travel in threes, each successive wave being larger than its predecessor, the sight is an imposing one. The further the progress the smaller they become in height, but this is compensated for by the fact that their motion is communicated to the mass of water below until the roll can be detected fully fifty feet under the surface. This gives them the name of "ground sea."

In this peculiarity their danger lies, for when a becalmed ship is caught in them her draught, the resisting power that enables her to ride a storm, becomes the fulcrum which the liquid mass uses to hurl her onward to destruction. On a calm day any sailing craft caught in "ground sea" near a rocky shore is as good as lost unless a wind can spring up and enable her to beat out to sea. Many a ship has met this fate. The reason many more do not get lost is due to the gentle swell that so deceives a landsman and warns a sailor.

As the "ground sea" advances it pushes a certain amount of water before it. This also forms into ridges, like its pursuer, but of less height and approximately no depth. The "false sea," as it is called, is little more than a rolling swell, but it gives a warning of from twenty minutes to two hours' duration, enabling a ship either to run into port, get out to sea, or securely anchor; while at the seaside resorts the boatmen run close to shore, to the surprise of the trippers.

When it is remembered that a wave twenty feet high, which is often attained by the "ground sea," strikes with a force of one ton to the square inch, the necessity for caution will be recognized.

All waves that come in parallel ridges, however, are not dangerous, as there is a "wind billow" that is closely allied to the "ground sea" in appearance. "Wind billows" are due to a heavy wind blowing but a few miles off the land, but as they have but a comparatively short distance to travel they have no depth. Consequently, even a rowing boat is perfectly safe on them if properly handled.—Pearson's Weekly.

Several New Ideas.

Cashmere stockings are now worn with double feet, and to those who suffer from cold feet this is a very great boon. They also do not wear into holes nearly so quickly as the ordinary kinds are so apt to do—and darning is not at all an agreeable practice.

Fur collarettes have a gold chain attached to them, so that they will not fall off the neck when open, as was their pleasing habit before this was invented. Many valuable furs have been lost in this way—fallen off and not noticed till they had disappeared.

SAMOAN GIRLS.

They Are Athletes and Born Coquettes.

The Samoan girl is not only an athlete, she is a born coquette. From the time she is ten years old, she begins to make eyes from behind a beautifully carved fan. She is without sincerity, but romantic to the extreme. Yet in spite of her romantic nature the Samoan girl when angered is a match for a Samoan warrior in activity and strength. It has been said that the Samoan women and girls are even harder to deal with than the men. They are absolutely without feeling, and are cruel to their captives.

If a Samoan is fortunate she will wear a necklace of shark's teeth and earrings made of some metal. That is her costume. The shark's teeth are usually the present of the favored suitor, and it often is the case that a girl hardly in her teens will have many necklaces. The more shark's teeth a girl possesses the more admirers she has, and, therefore, the more is envied by her less fortunate sisters. The Samoans are a great people for dancing, and during holiday season dancing is in order day and night. The girls take to dancing as naturally as they do to swimming, and a girl is taught to swim before she is taught to walk. They are graceful, and readily learn any dance.

The Samoan girl has no choice of husbands. The marrige is always arranged by her parents, and she accepts the inevitable. However, marriage does not prevent a woman from having admirers.—Woman's Life.

That Unlucky 13.

"How do you think I have been absorbing atmosphere lately?" asked the girl. "No, I am in earnest. Of course I don't mean riding in the open cars. Don't you know you always hear artists talking about atmosphere? They have to have it. They go abroad, not so much to study as to get atmosphere, and I thought perhaps it might be a good thing to apply that principle and get a little for the different things I am doing. I first commenced to do my hair up on the leaves of a German calendar, but it occurred to me after I had begun that it was a practical way of getting this atmosphere, and I am not sure but I did get along a bit better with my German. But I finally came to grief, and you would never guess how. No, not with my German, but with my hair. One day I was particularly anxious to have my hair look well, but in the morning when I took out one of my curl papers the lock of hair that was around it was perfectly straight. I couldn't see how it was, because I had done my hair up all alike and this was the only one that went wrong. Now, I never was superstitious, though of course I wouldn't do anything when there was a very bad omen. But what do you think? The piece of the calendar the straight lock was on was for the thirteenth day of the month, and there was a big figure 13 on it. I wouldn't have believed it if it hadn't happened to me, but it just goes to show that thirteen is an unlucky number. Only one lock of hair straight."

Ladies' Pelerine.

Fur collarettes and pelerines, have taken the place of capes in feminine fancy this season. Combinations in furs are extremely fashionable, many beautiful and striking effects being produced with blue fox and stone martin, Persian lamb or seal, with white, black or grey fox, sable, chinchilla and ermine. In this lovely pelerine, Alaska sable is used to trim rich seal. The adjustment is made by shoulder seams and a centre back seam may also be used, if so desired. The back is shaped in a shallow point. The front is broad at the shoulders, fits stylishly over the bust and ends in a decided point a trifle below the waist line.

The sable is applied around the back and on the shoulders at a considerable depth, but narrows toward the lower edge, where it ends in two beautiful tails. The high flaring collar is fashionably shaped, fastening close at the neck to give the desired protection. It is faced with sable. Charming effects can be produced by the same model in less expensive material. Persian lamb cloth may be trimmed with inexpensive fur or velour can be used for the body of the pelerine with astrakhan for the trimming. To make this pelerine in the medium size will require ⅝ of a yard of velvet 27 inches wide with 1 yard of contrasting material the same width. MAY MANTON.
